

Understanding Sudan

A Teaching and Learning Resource

Interview and Poster Project

A group of students will work together to create an interview about a specific environmental issue in Sudan. The group will play different roles: interviewer, proponent and opponent. Example: Students could ask the question of whether Darfur is an environmental crisis. Each group member will be responsible for putting together a 2-page position paper outlining their positions on different issues. The interviewer will put together a paper summing up the issue at hand, and giving interview questions.

From these interviews, students will put together posters concerning these environmental issues. A poster is a visual and written summary of information intended to give viewers a short overview of a topic. Students will probably need to rely heavily on the internet for this project, but should be aware that all information presented must be properly cited.
